Amer Ari & The PGA Tour Connection

"I always think under par. You have to believe in yourself." —Sergio Garcia

PGA Tour professional Jordan Spieth spent a good part of 2015 ranked as the No. 1 golfer in the world, leapfrogging with Jason Day and Rory McIlroy for the honors. He climbed steadily toward the top of the rankings with wins at the Valspar Championship (March) and The Masters Tournament (April), with two second place finishes between the victories. He finally made it to the top slot in August and has remained in the top three ever since.

But it was only four short years ago, 2012, that Spieth was at Waikoloa Beach Resort, a standout collegiate player at University of Texas, leading a talented Longhorns team to a No. 1 national ranking and a victory at the 22nd Amer Ari Intercollegiate tournament.

It's remarkable, really, for a player to jump from collegiate standout to best player in the world in such a short span of time. How did he do it? Was it pure talent alone? Turns out that Spieth — and a long list of top players before him, including Matt Kuchar, Anthony Kim, and Notah Begay — along with their college coaches, view tournaments such as the Amer Ari to be a perfect testing ground for the PGA Tour.

Coach Tim Mickelson of Arizona State University (ASU) says, "I encourage every player on my team to have professional golf as a goal of theirs. If they don't want to take their golf to the pro level, there's no guarantee I can get them to give 100 percent every day during college. The Amer Ari is one of the best collegiate tournaments in the country. It always has one of the strongest fields every year and simply participating in the event gives the college players a great feel of where they fit in college golf. If you can win the Amer Ari, you know you are in elite company."

a life on the road: the travel, adjustment to time zone changes, and other issues encountered in the global game played today.

Auburn's Johnson, whose team travels to Hawai'i Island from Auburn, Alabama, feels the Amer Ari provides a good glimpse of those challenges. "The Amer Ari definitely gives you a taste of the Tour," he says, "meaning that you have to travel a little bit more than usual to play and you have to deal with jet lag. It is really important there to catch up on your sleep."

But he also says participating in the tournament has been one of his best college experiences: "Playing in the Amer Ari has been a blast since my sophomore year. It is such a fun tournament with one of the best fields in college golf."

Of course not every player, regardless of their collegiate success, is set on a career on the PGA Tour. The number three-ranked player in men's college golf, Maverick McNealy of Stanford University, says, "To be honest, I am not sure. All I know is that, for the next year and a half, I am going to work as hard as I can to get my degree (in Management Science and Engineering), improve as much as possible, and play the best golf that I possibly can."

McNealy says his biggest motivator is improvement. "One of the most rewarding things for me in life is getting better at something. My freshman year, I finished tied for 90th (+4) at the Amer Ari, and last year I finished tied for 2nd (-15). To me, that improvement was even more satisfying than winning the tournament."

To that end, whether they end up playing on the PGA Tour or not, the game of golf, along with the experiences that tournaments such as the Amer Ari provide, go a long way in preparing a young person for whatever life has to offer.

The annual Amer Ari Intercollegiate golf tournament will take place at The Kings' Course at Waikoloa Beach Resort on February 4-6, 2016. The host team is UH-Hilo, coached by Earl Tamiya, with 18 schools competing. The event is free and open to the public, with teams teeing off at 7:30 am each morning.

Hard Work, Dedication

The current top-ranked collegiate player in the country is Michael Johnson of Auburn University. He and his teammates will once again be participating in the Amer Ari this February. Is it possible that Hawai'i Island galleries will have a chance to see the next Jordan Spieth roaming the fairways at Waikoloa Beach Resort? If you ask Johnson, the answer is a resounding yes.

"My main goal in golf is to play on the PGA Tour," he says. "I can see myself playing on Tour for a long time. The success of Jordan (Spieth) doesn't surprise me at all. Everywhere he has played he has won; he is a special player. So it really wasn't a big surprise to me. It just shows me that if you work hard and are a competitor you can win. It doesn't make me work harder it really just makes me want to win more. I want to get out on Tour and compete with the best."

ASU's Mickelson — whose brother Phil has had a Hall of Fame PGA Tour career — says his goal is to have his players work and prepare just as the Tour pros do so they are prepared for professional golf after their four years in college.

"I believe that there is no substitute for hard work," he says. "If you put in the right type of work, the right amount of work, truly dedicate yourself to your goal, and have some fundamentals, then we feel that will give them the best chance at a successful professional golf career."
