Connected to the Past

Keeping Hawaiian Traditions Alive Through Hula

"To see through the fragments of time to the full power of the original being ... that is a function of art."
—Mythologist Joseph Campbell

In Hawai'i, art has often been a powerful vehicle connecting the Hawaiian people to their past and inspiring us all through its truth-telling and beauty. This is seen in the work of the state's painters, wood carvers, sculptors, weavers, and more. And it is particularly apparent in the songs (mele), chants (oli), and hula dances that reach deep into the soul of the Hawaiian culture, both keeping its ancient traditions alive and telling its sacred stories.

At Waikoloa Beach Resort, guests and locals alike enjoy hula performances several times a week on stages at both Queens' MarketPlace and Kings' Shops, as well as at weekly lū'au at Hilton Waikoloa Village and Waikoloa Beach Marriott Resort & Spa.

"Respect for the Hawaiian culture was hard-baked from the very beginning into everything we do," says Scott Head, vice president resort operations. "The music, dance, arts, and crafts of Hawai'i are celebrated year-round throughout the resort. That directive came early on directly from our visionary developer, Ron Boeddeker, and it is gladly adhered to today by every Waikoloa employee."

On a broader scale, hula is celebrated throughout the islands, and in particular at the annual Merrie Monarch Festival held in Hilo (April 5 - 7, 2018).

HULA TO THE WORLD

Nani Lim-Yap is one of Hawai'i's foremost practitioners of traditional dance, both as a dancer and as a kumu hula (master instructor). Though she has performed at Waikoloa Beach Resort on occasion, it is with the troupe she co-led with her sister Leialoha, Halau Na Lei O Kaholoku, that Nani is perhaps most well known. The halau won multiple awards at the Merrie Monarch Festival over the years, and along with her illustrious and talented

NEW DIRECTIONS

At this year's Merrie Monarch Festival, Nani's current halau, Manaola — formed in 2016 and named after her son — will be performing what for them will be a more modern story. It is based on the legacy of Queen Kapi'olani (1834 – 1899) who was known for her philanthropy and deep commitment to the health, education, and well-being of the Hawaiian people in a time when huge social and cultural changes were sweeping over the islands.

"We go to Merrie Monarch to tell stories that have never been told before," Nani says. "This year we will be telling the story of Kapi'olani's efforts to bring forth and preserve the Hawaiian race."

Though the tale may be more modern than ancient, the ties to the past remains the same.

"The message is that we are connected to our kūpuna through time and space," Nani says. "They were a special people and as dancers we must find that connection."

For Nani and the Lim family, the past is a family thing. Descendants of Alapa'inui — one of the ruling chiefs of Hawai'i Island in the 1750s and uncle to Kamehameha the Great — both her father and her mother were talented musicians who would play music to entertain the family in their remote Parker Ranch home. They would also often perform at Mauna Kea Beach Hotel, and as soon as they were old enough, their kids, including Sonny, Lorna, and Nani, began performing with them.

Nowadays, a third generation of the Lim-Yap family is coming of age and, following in the tradition of their forebearers, telling the sacred stories of their ancient people. Just as it should be.

family — including her well-known siblings Sonny Lim and Lorna Lim — she performs around the world, bringing Hawaiian hula, chant, and song to enchanted audiences eager for a taste of the islands.

"We are keeping the traditions of our kūpuna (respected elders and ancestors) and their stories alive in our time," she says. "That keeps us connected to the things that they held sacred. In our time, it is very important for us to keep the sacred things sacred."

Lim-Yap specializes in the ancient style of hula known as hula kahiko. Unlike other forms of hula that are accompanied by modern instruments such as a guitar, ukulele, or double bass, the hula kahiko is most often accompanied by only a chant and a drum.

"We dance to our language," she says. "Through the dance, the stories of our kūpuna are being told. As dancers we must be committed to telling those stories."

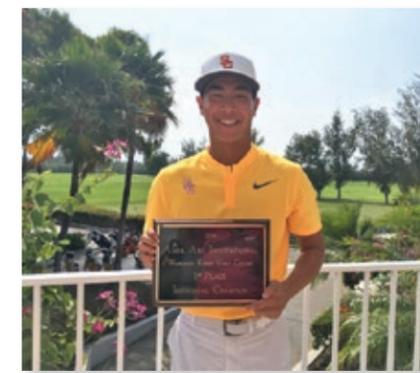

In that way, the chants are an equally important part of telling the story, just as they are an important part of life in all of traditional Hawai'i.

"We are taught a traditional chant before we begin a class," Nani says. "There is a chant to enter the room; a chant to put on the skirt. That's where the power comes from. That is where the mana comes from. We need to prepare our minds about why we came to halau. I always remember that."

AMER ARI INVITATIONAL

The 27th annual Amer Ari Intercollegiate Golf Tournament was contested over the Waikoloa Kings' Course in early February, with Oklahoma State emerging as the champion in decisive fashion. The Cowboys took the lead on the second day of play and never relinquished it, propelled by the strong play of Viktor Hovland (-12), Matthew Wolff (-12), and Hayden Wood (-11). Texas Tech finished second, and the USC Trojans came in third. The individual champion was Justin Suh of USC (-13), who bested Hovland and Wolff by a single stroke. "It was an awesome tournament, with some truly great players and fantastic weather," said Kevin Ginoza, head golf professional at Waikoloa. "We're so happy to have some of the best collegiate teams in the nation coming out to Waikoloa Beach Resort every year."

ASIAN FEST

Lions and Taiko drums helped welcome the Chinese "Year of the Dog" at the exciting "Asian Fest" at Queens' MarketPlace on Friday, February 2. The event was marked by the high energy of vibrant Lion Dancers and driving rhythms of drums from around the world. And as they do every year, revelers had their lycee (red envelope) ready with "lettuce" to feed the Lion and ensure good health and fortune in 2018. More than Chinese New Year, Asian Fest brought together the fun and fascinating Far East traditions that came to Hawai'i and are still inspiring residents and visitors from everywhere.
