Hot Lava, Hotter Cuisine

Annual Hawai'i Food & Wine Festival Heats Up

Foodies take note! The annual Hawai'i Food & Wine Festival (HFWF) will return to the Big Island on Saturday, October 22, with a signature event, "Hot Lava, Hotter Cuisine." The dinner will be held at Hilton Waikoloa Village in partnership with the Waikoloa Beach Resort and Waikoloa Beach Marriott.

The theme, according to HFWF's Chief Executive Officer Denise Yamaguchi, "was something we came up with that would define the level of the talent coming to Hawai'i Island. It's a play on words. Everyone knows that lava is hot, and we wanted to express that the cuisine created by these chefs will be even hotter."

Yamaguchi points out that four of the six chefs cooking have won James Beard Awards and a fifth chef from Korea was 27th in Asia's Fifty Best Restaurants 2016. "What could be hotter than that?" she asks.

Participating will be some of the Mainland's most talented culinary artists, including Nancy Silverton (Mozza, Los Angeles, CA), Hubert Keller (Fleur by Hubert Keller, Las Vegas, NV), Michelle Bernstein (Seagrape, Miami, FL), and Bruce Bromberg (Blue Ribbon Restaurants, New York, NY). Favorite local chefs Hans Lentz (Hilton Waikoloa Village) and Jayson Kanekoa (Waikoloa Beach Marriott) will be representing Hawai'i Island. And Tae-Hwan Ryu (Ryunique, Seoul, South Korea) will be bringing his talents to Waikoloa Beach Resort as well.

YEAR-ROUND & WORLDWIDE

The addition of Chef Ryu from South Korea to this year's lineup is telling, as it represents an expansion that the Festival has envisioned from the beginning. "From the very start, our vision for the Hawai'i Food & Wine Festival was to build a world-class food and wine festival," Yamaguchi says. "This meant inviting and attracting the best chefs and winemakers to produce the highest quality event that would be comparable to some of our nation's best food and wine events. After six years, I am proud that we may be able to consider ourselves among the best, having earned a reputation for quality, integrity, and magnitude.

"It was also our vision to include world-class international chefs from Asia in our Festival — something that differentiates us from other festivals across the U.S.," Yamaguchi says. "Being in the middle of the Pacific, this just made sense for us. It was to bridge relationships between chefs from the East with the West."

In addition to bridging relationships, Chef Ryu is certain to dazzle Hawai'i Island festival-goers with his world-class cuisine. "Tae is quite a culinarian," says HFWF co-founder (and Denise's husband) Roy Yamaguchi. "He is creative and passionate about his cooking. His plates are attentive to detail. He utilizes his skills of modern gastronomy. His food is Michelin-caliber and I can't wait to see what he'll create for our festival."

The Yamaguchis, along with HFWF's other co-founder, Alan Wong, were recently in South Korea, where they took part in an event on Jeju Island, "Hawaii Meets Jeju," as part of an outreach program designed to expose contemporary Hawaii cuisine to the world.

"The name Hawai'i is magic to the rest of the world," Wong says. "We are always warmly received wherever we go. The problem is that the world doesn't really know about the modern day Hawai'i and the cuisine being served in the state. They continue to think that we put slices of pineapple on hamburgers and pizza and that this is called a Hawaiian hamburger and a Hawaiian pizza."

Roy Yamaguchi elaborates: "I've traveled to over 40 countries through cooking and I'm always welcomed with open arms. People around the world think of Hawai'i as a tropical place of beauty and peace. We've really come a long way through food and I think it's something that we all strive for when we put together Hawai'i Regional Cuisine. As we elevate the level and quality of our food, we're able to do more to showcase Hawai'i."

ONLY HAWAII CAN BE HAWAII

Cuisine is one surefire way to relate

Hawai'i's heritage to the world. With new direct flights being planned from Japan and elsewhere in Asia to Hawai'i Island, the work that the Hawai'i Food & Wine Festival is doing will hopefully pay dividends in increased tourism. Sponsors, including Waikoloa Beach Resort and the Hawaii Tourism Authority, are counting on it.

"Hawaii is such a unique place, with multiple cultures all contributing to make us what we are," says Scott Head, vice president of resort operations for Waikoloa Beach Resort. "And nowhere is this truer than in the food our guests are presented, which continues to evolve into a truly world-inspired, world-class cuisine using fresh and amazing ingredients found right here on our island. We are excited and honored to host the Hawai'i Food & Wine Festival here on Hawai'i Island, and specifically here at our resort."

"The world will come if we have created experiences you can only have while here in Hawai'i," says Denise Yamaguchi. "While you can create a food and wine experience about Hawai'i in other places, what's missing that cannot be replaced is our culture, the generosity and hospitality of our people, and the aloha spirit. Our advantage is authenticity and only Hawai'i can be Hawai'i."

The good news for Hawai'i Island residents and guests of Waikoloa Beach Resort is that one of the signature events of the 2016 Hawaii Food & Wine Festival is being held right in their own backyard. It's a hot and hotter opportunity to taste what the rest of the world only dreams of.

38TH ANNUAL VISITOR INDUSTRY CHARITY WALK

"A tradition of giving. We're all in this together."

That was the theme for the 2016 Visitor Industry Charity Walk that was held on Saturday, May 14 at Waikoloa Beach Resort. The annual 3.1-mile run, walk (and snack) event was created by the Hawai'i Lodging and Tourism Association in 1978 as a way for the visitor industry to "walk the walk," and give back to community.

Since then it has grown into a major fundraiser statewide, generating over $28 million in the last 37 years. In 2015 alone, 11,200 walkers raised over $1.8 million to help local charities, with funds raised on the island remaining on the island to support numerous non-profit groups and noteworthy causes.

Hotel and resort properties from across the island enjoyed the friendly competition of Charity Walk, challenging each other to win the race, bring out the most participants, raise the most money, and serve up the best food. In addition, those chosen as beneficiaries supported the runners and walkers with aid stations along the scenic route from Queen's MarketPlace to Kings' Land by Hilton Grand Vacations, and back to Waikoloa Bowl.

"The Visitor Industry Charity Walk is something we in hospitality look forward to every single year," said Rob Gunthner, Hawaii Lodging and Tourism Association-Hawaii Island Chapter Chair. "But it's not just for hospitality workers ... anyone can participate. We love it when visitors walk along with us, then join us over in the Bowl for some great music, entertainment, and outstanding food by our Waikoloa Beach Resort restaurants."

Participants of all ages enjoyed the morning exercise and the after-event atmosphere on the expansive lawn of Waikoloa Bowl where 20-plus food stands were found, along with entertainment by DJ Tiger and Beyond Paradise, and a live radio broadcast by DC from B93, Eddy O with Native FM, and more.

LESSONS FROM A MASTER

For the third year in a row, noted golf instructor Bob May brought his renowned Golf Academy to Waikoloa Beach Resort in June, offering island golfers and visitors a chance to learn from one of golf's best.

May notably pushed Tiger Woods to a three-hole playoff in the 2000 PGA Championship at Valhalla, during a year in which Woods was at the height of his dominance. The playoff ultimately went to Woods, but the golf world never forgot May's tenacious play that day.

May's instruction includes an emphasis on that determination and tenacity for which he was so well respected on Tour, as well as his extensive knowledge of the swing.

All skill levels took advantage of his Waikoloa Beach Resort visit, from beginning golfers to seasoned players, as well as juniors.
